

EMD's Classic Cowl Units: A Color Pictorial

By Sean Graham White

Four Ways West Publications, 2002. hardcover. Book Condition: New. EMD's Classic Cowl Units: A Color Pictorial by Sean Graham White. With its request for a cowl locomotive to replace aging streamlined passenger units, Santa Fe Railway resurrected streamlined locomotive designs from General Motors Electro-Motive Division by requesting a new design which would better match the railroads streamlined passenger equipment. That design was the FP45. The design was successful enough to result in several permutations and additional sales to other railroads. A freight version was also built, the F45. Specialty cowl units also included the SDP40F and F40C. These four models are considered the 'classic cowl'. A chapter on each owner of these cowl units are presented plus appendices of locomotive specifications and diagrams and a cowl unit roster.
